1. President Bustamante is reported to have been planning the reorganization of his Cabinet, and among those mentioned as possible new members have been Senator Hector Boza, Manuel Gallagher, and Jose Quesada.
2. Bustamante has reportedly asked Boza to accept the Presidency of the new Cabinet. Boza's reaction to this proposal is not known, but it is said that he approached Gallagher, offering him the post of Minister of Foreign Affairs. Gallagher declined.
3. The President is also said to be considering Jose Quesada, now Peruvian Ambassador to Argentina, for the post of Foreign Minister. Quesada has indicated to friends that he may be returning to Peru for reasons of health, but he has reiterated his many former statements that he would never serve in a Cabinet under Bustamante. According to the current opinion of the Civilista party, Quesada is still hoping to achieve the Presidency in 1952, and would be unlikely to prejudice his chances by accepting a Cabinet post at this time.
4. Manuel Prado is reported to be engaged in rebuilding the machinery of his party and is initiating a vigorous campaign to mobilize throughout the country the support of minor Government officials whom he knew as President. Recently, he has been sending his representatives all through the country carrying greetings from the ex-President. His son went to the Tingo Maria region with a list of these officials, to each of whom he was instructed to give special greetings.
5. Manuel Gallagher has stated that Prado's organization is not considered strong enough to seize power at present, but that few other organizations appear in as strong a position to take advantage of events if political responsibility should be "forced upon them".
